UPPER PENINSULA

Michigan's Upper Peninsula is a natural, scenic wonder, unspoiled by commercialism and industrial saturation.

The Upper Peninsula was the first part of the western Great Lakes area to become settled. As early as 1668, the town of Sault Ste. Marie was established and reigns as the oldest town in the Midwest.

Over 319,000 people live year-round in Michigan's Upper Peninsula and are supported almost totally by the value of their land. It is a land rich in minerals, a land of fruitful forests, and an incredibly beautiful scenic area. This natural beauty fuels the economy of the Upper Peninsula.

During the era of California's Gold Rush, the tiny village of Negaunee, in Michigan's Upper Peninsula, had a discovery of its own—iron ore! That discovery turned out to be more important to the economic and industrial growth of America than all of the gold nuggets in California.

Blessed with an abundance of hardwoods, over 90 percent of the Upper Peninsula's land is forested. Maple, aspen, oak, and elm are lumbered and shipped throughout the nation in all seasons. The U.P. evergreen is especially popular at Christmastime, when it is shipped as far as Florida, to be decorated in the holiday tradition.

The U.P. boasts healthy, invigorating winters and sleep-under-the-blanket summers with almost pollen-free air and more fresh water than any other area its size in the world.

Winter and summer, tourists flock to Michigan's Upper Peninsula. The beautiful winters offer near-perfect conditions and facilities for snow sports lovers, including the world's highest man-made ski jump and the world's only ski-flying hill.

Summertime tourists invade the Upper Peninsula to soak up the natural beauty of the thousands of inland lakes and streams, the nearly 150 waterfalls, the Pictured Rocks at Munising, the Porcupine Mountains, Lake of the Clouds, Isle Royale, Mackinac Island, and the countless other scenic wonders . . . a virtual paradise right here in Michigan!

Lake of the Clouds is an idyllic spot, one many travelers—from Michigan and many other states—enjoy.

LOWER PENINSULA

In almost complete contrast to the Upper Peninsula, the personality of Michigan's Lower Peninsula includes big cities, industry, manufacturing, and agricultural production. Its greatest claim to fame is the "Motor City," Detroit, the automotive capital of the world!

Michigan leads the nation in many different manufacturing categories, for most of which the Lower Peninsula is responsible. Leading that list, of course, is the manufacture of cars and trucks, providing the Lower Peninsula with the bulk of its economy.

The most famous of our pioneers in the auto industry was Henry Ford. Ford hand-built his first auto in 1896 and formed the Ford Motor Company in 1903. The very first auto produced by Ford's company was a 1908 Model-T, with a price tag of $950.00. Today, Michigan's Lower Peninsula manufactures automobiles by the millions.

The Lower Peninsula is world famous for the manufacture of breakfast cereals, office furniture, pharmaceuticals, limestone, baby food, cement, auto parts, nonelectric motors, and even magic supplies!

Our agricultural bounty is well known across the nation, leading in the production of navy beans, tart cherries, blueberries, black turtle beans, and cranberry beans. Michigan is among the leaders in the production of maple syrup, apples, plums, grapes, and wine.

Aside from its industrious attitude, Michigan's Lower Peninsula finds time for fun and recreation, too. Thousands of sandy beaches on freshwater lakes and many winding rivers and streams make it a haven for water sports, beachcombing, fishing, hunting, camping, and all-around enjoyment of Michigan's outdoors. At work or play, the Lower Peninsula has everything to offer its residents and visitors . . . in every season!

PORTRAITS OF MICHIGAN

Michigan's miles of rivers and streams make canoeing a popular pastime for people who live in our state. It is also enjoyed by thousands of tourists who visit our "water wonderland" each year.

Hunting, both bow and firearm, is a sport enjoyed by Michigan's outdoor enthusiasts.

Fishing, a sport as old as the very first Michiganians, is a relaxing way to spend leisure time.

MICHIGAN'S OUTDOOR CREATURES

Birds

If you are a bird watcher, camera bug, or just an all-around nature lover, you will enjoy trying to spot some of the 233 species of birds that breed in this state, some of which brace themselves and stick around for our blustery winter season. One rare bird, the Kirtland's Warbler, breeds in the jack pine forests of Michigan's northern Lower Peninsula, and probably nowhere else in the world. Dozens more species visit our state during the spring and fall migrations. Most species, however, wing their way to warmer climates when snow flies. Even our state bird, the robin redbreast, spends winters in the southern sunshine, returning each year to the delight of Michiganians—a sure sign of spring's arrival.

Fish

Michigan's abundant waters nurture 154 different species of fish, approximately 30 of which are familiar to the thousands of anglers who fish Michigan's lakes, rivers, and streams each year.

These white-tailed deer are foraging for food in one of Michigan's picturesque snow-covered forests. One of them seems to be asking, "Do you have an ear of corn for me?"

Lake trout are a favorite sport fish native to Michigan's three upper Great Lakes. Although they suffered a very severe decline from the ravages of the sea lamprey in the 1950s, and from lightly controlled commercial fishing, lake trout are returning to their earlier abundance. Their natural comeback has been aided by substantial plantings in Lakes Superior, Michigan, and Huron by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and state and provincial agencies, and by a stricter control of commercial fishing.

Coho salmon are the wonder fish of the Great Lakes. Coho were carefully selected to control the alewife and to provide an important game fish. Skeptics said it couldn't be done, but the first fish lived. Skeptics said they wouldn't do well on the alewife, but they thrived on this nuisance fish and threatened national size records. Skeptics said Cohos wouldn't be able to reproduce either, but they've done just that even though it is on a limited basis. Coho salmon are here to stay and they have proved to be an extremely popular open water game fish as well as a good stream fish.

White-Tailed Deer

Michigan white-tailed deer have been spotted everywhere in Michigan. There is no sight more impressive than a statuesque white-tailed deer posing in a meadow at dusk. Some folks, who enjoy seeing deer along the roads and trails in summer, view the annual deer hunting season as deplorable. They fear these beautiful animals will be decimated. However, it should be kept in mind that if deer become too numerous, they may cause considerable damage to farm crops and young trees, and also present a danger to motorists. Department of Natural Resources biologists manage Michigan's deer herd so that there are enough deer for hunters and nature lovers to enjoy, but not so many that they become a nuisance to farmers and forest managers, and a danger on the state's roads.

Elk

The Michigan elk, once abundant in Michigan, is smaller than the moose and far more graceful and noble in appearance. Native elk were completely destroyed in Michigan long ago, but a reproducing herd, brought here from Wyoming, has been established in the Pigeon River State Forest in Otsego County.

Moose

The moose again roams our northern Michigan woods, thanks to the generosity of Canada. Our friendly neighbors sent us about 60 moose in 1985 and 1987 during Mooselifts I and II. There is also a moose population at Isle Royale National Park, which is surrounded by the waters of Lake Superior. The moose are large, cumbersome animals, less fearful of humans than deer. They make excellent subjects for your camera, but stay out of their thunderous paths!

Black Bear

The Michigan black bear, native to Michigan, is maintaining its numbers in the state and may even be on the increase. But they know how to keep out of sight! People may live in bear country for years without ever seeing one. For this reason, dependable knowledge of bears is very scarce. We would not advise seeking them out as a sightseeing venture—for Michigan's black bears clearly resent intruders.

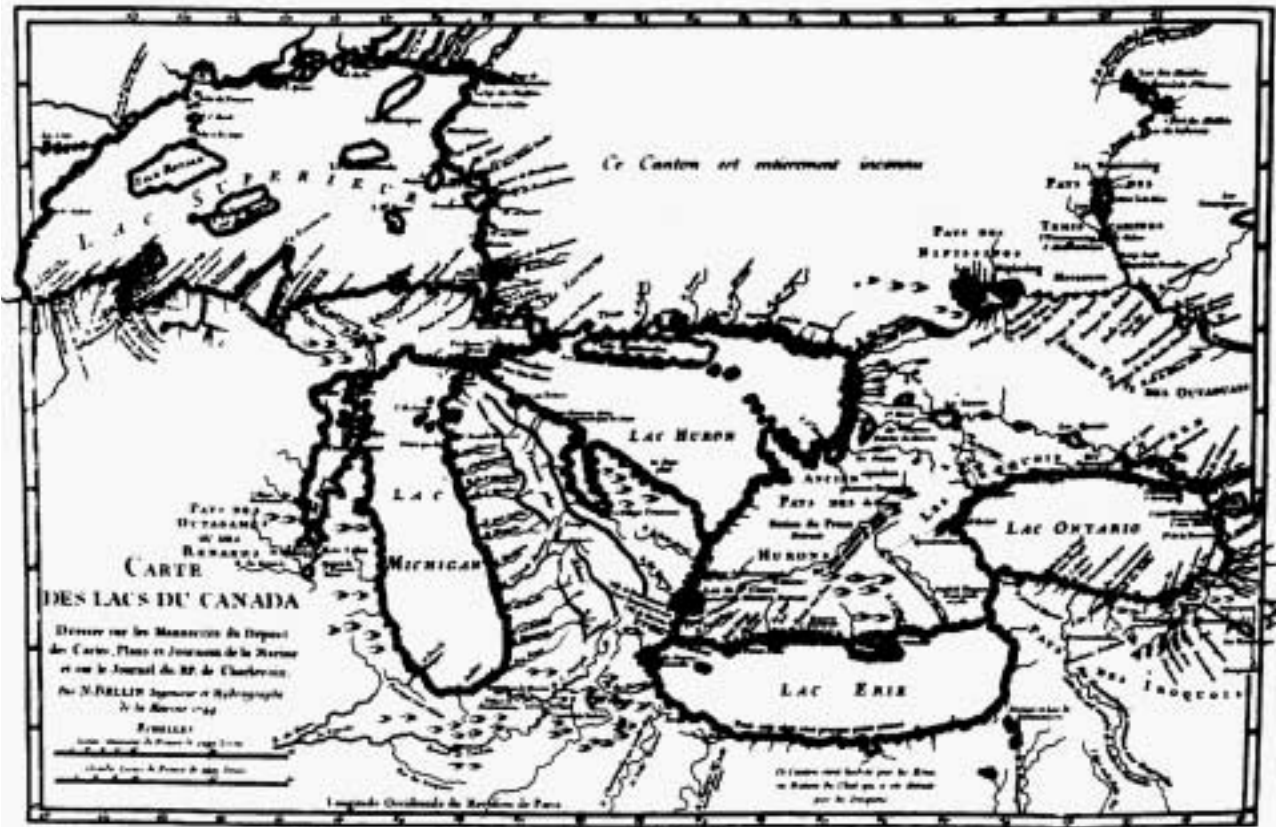

Yum, yum—honey on a stick! This black bear cub is getting a taste of Michigan's bounty.

Wolverine

Although we are nicknamed the "Wolverine State," spotting a Michigan wolverine would be a rarity. In fact, it has never been proven that any wolverine ever lived in Michigan except in a zoo. Perhaps, since wolverines lived in Canada and northern Minnesota, someone decided that they may very well have lived in Michigan too. It is also odd that we chose an animal with such a bad disposition to represent our state. From all reports, he is far from a model to be emulated. A more logical choice might have been one of the cousins of the wolverine, the marten or the fisher, who were once numbered among Michigan's important furbearers and are true natives of our state.

Rabbits and Squirrels

Abundant in Michigan, rabbits and squirrels can be found in several interesting varieties of species throughout the state. Different "rabbit" species include the cottontail and the snowshoe hare. There are a variety of squirrels, including the fox, the gray (including the black phase), the red, and the flying squirrel.

This 1744 map illustrates how the Great Lakes were depicted by an 18th Century mapmaker.

Michigan is a fun and unique state. With the Great Lakes and an abundance of smaller lakes, sand dunes, hiking trails, and ski slopes, it is a land teeming with scenic beauty and outdoor activities in four very different seasons. At the same time, there are museums, theaters, sporting events, and entertaining attractions in metropolitan areas for all to enjoy.

Throughout these pleasant peninsulas, there is also a wealth of natural resources that have contributed to a rich history. Lumber, copper, iron, salt, oil, and other raw materials have attracted countless immigrants—perhaps your great-grandparents. Manufacturing these resources into goods, like cars, has brought people from around the country—even the world—to help make Michigan a “melting pot” of cultures.

Now that you have read a little about our beautiful and bountiful state, the following section of games and quizzes will help you learn more about Michigan, its past, and its people. You will not find all of the answers in the material you have just read, but we hope the questions will arouse your interest and contribute to the pride you feel in this beautiful state. It is not important how many questions you respond to correctly, but how much you learn. Few people know all the answers, but all who read the booklet will surely have fun while learning more about a place with a proud past, productive present, and promising future—Michigan.

MICHIGAN ALBUM

The following events in Michigan's colorful history are in the wrong order.

Write the correct order for these four articles*: Section I: 1.____ 2.____ 3.____ 4.____

Lincoln Says: "Thank God for Michigan"

A. The men pictured above are part of the Fourth Michigan Infantry. More than 90,000 Michigan men (and at least one woman posing as a man!) fought in the Civil War. Nearly 15,000 died. The Twenty-Fourth Michigan, part of the "Iron Brigade," suffered 80 percent casualties during fighting at Gettysburg, the greatest loss of any Northern regiment in this historic battle. Other Michigan heroes include the 60 soldiers who won the Congressional Medal of Honor and the members of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry who captured Confederate President Jefferson Davis.

President Lincoln, who said, "Thank God for Michigan," when the First Michigan Infantry was the first western regiment to reach the nation's capital, had many reasons to be grateful for Michigan's volunteers.

Michigan Becomes Auto Capital of the World

B. Michigan, with its abundant raw materials, skilled work force, waterways to eastern markets, and engineering pioneers, was the birthplace of the automobile industry. Charles King of Detroit was the first person to drive a gasoline-powered car in Michigan. Three months later, Henry Ford rode through the streets in his car. Ransom Olds started the first automobile company and others soon followed. Henry Ford perfected the assembly-line production method, which made cars affordable, and started the famed $5-a-day wage, which attracted people from all over the world.

Explorers Claim Beautiful Peninsulas for King Louis XIV

C. The French explorers Etienne Brulé and Grenoble were probably the first Europeans to see the Great Lakes. Subsequently, thousands of French followed, settling in the region they called New France. Many of the inhabitants grew wealthy trapping and selling fur-bearing animals, particularly beavers. Others searched for the great river the Native Americans called "Messissippi," which they hoped was a direct water route to India and China. In the 1660s, the Jesuit missionary Father Jacques Marquette established a mission in the Upper Peninsula, hoping to convert the tribes to Christianity.

Lumbermen Beginning Spring Drive

D. The great white pines in central and northern Michigan made our state the leading lumber producer in the nation in the latter part of the 19th century. Men from all over Canada, the Northeast, and Western Europe converged on Michigan to work as lumberjacks. By the turn-of-the-century era, over 160 billion board feet were logged in Michigan. If this lumber were laid out in four feet high by eight feet wide stacks, it would circle the world 50 times. Much of the wood was cut during the ice and snow of winter when it was easier to move the heavy logs to the riverbanks. In the springtime, when the swelling rivers were at their widest, lumbermen directed the timber downstream to sawmills in the growing lumber towns of Muskegon, Bay City, and Saginaw. The lumber boom impacted not only Michigan, but the entire nation as the value of this lumber was greater than all the gold mined during the California Gold Rush.

Rosie the Riveter

A. Following the attack on Pearl Harbor, Michigan’s automobile industry ended civilian automobile production, switching to the manufacture of airplanes, tanks, artillery, and other war equipment. By the end of the war, Michigan had earned the title “Arsenal of Democracy.” State industries contributed 3 million engines, 25,000 tanks, and 8,500 B-24 Liberator bombers to the war effort. Michigan women were an invaluable resource in the war against dictatorship. From 1940 to 1943, the number of women employed in Michigan more than doubled from 391,000 to 799,100. Nicknamed “Rosie the Riveter” after a popular song of the times, these women symbolized the noble and patriotic contributions of women to the cause of liberty.

51 Killed in State's Worst Mining Disaster

B. In the past century and a half, Michigan's Upper Peninsula copper and iron mining ranges have produced several billion pounds of refined copper and over a billion tons of iron ore. The above picture was taken six months prior to the collapse of the Barnes-Hecker Mine in Ishpeming, located near Marquette. Most of these men died in what is the worst mining disaster in Michigan history. On November 3, 1926, 51 miners perished when the underground mine collapsed, filling with water in 15 minutes. Only one man survived. Later, the shaft opening was capped with cement and a five-foot tall, steel-plated monument was erected in their memory.

Bridging the Peninsulas

C. Prior to the construction of the Mackinac Bridge, it took travelers an hour to cross the often treacherous waters of the straits by car ferry. It was not unusual that on Independence Day, people waited in line for up to 24 hours to take the ferry to St. Ignace. In 1954, bridge construction began. For the next 42 months, hundreds of men sank large, double-walled caissons into the lake floor bedrock, strung the two main cables consisting of 42,000 miles of spun steel wire, enough to circle the world one and a half times, and laid five miles of road surface. Five men lost their lives erecting the 552-foot high bridge that cost taxpayers more than $100 million. The 100 millionth bridge crossing occurred on June 25, 1998.

30,000 Troops Form Human U.S. Shield

D. While training to fight in World War I, the "war to end all wars," soldiers at Fort Custer, near Battle Creek, participated in forming human shields, a popular event at that time. Across the United States, few other forts could match Fort Custer's U.S. Shield, which consisted of 30,000 soldiers dressed in red, white, and blue-colored shirts. Such patriotism was evident throughout the state as more than 135,000 Michiganders were inducted into the Armed Forces.

- ◆ That, in the late 1800s and early 1900s, Bertha Van Hoosen, a talented doctor and skilled surgeon born and raised in Michigan, was denied entrance into the medical societies because she was a woman? She later taught obstetrics and gynecology at the University of Illinois and Loyola University medical schools. She paid her own tuition to the University of Michigan by teaching because her parents objected to her career choice.

President Theodore Roosevelt visited Michigan in 1907 to participate in the 50th anniversary celebration of Michigan Agricultural College in East Lansing. He was driven to the College by Ransom E. Olds in a REO automobile. Sitting next to him in the back seat is the president of the college, Dr. Jonathon L. Snyder. Ransom E. Olds, himself, is at the helm of the REO with President Roosevelt's secretary, Mr. Loeb, sitting beside him. It is said that the president returned to Lansing in an Oldsmobile so as not to show any partiality.

Sojourner Truth, a freed slave from New York state, came to Michigan in the 1850s.

She lived in Battle Creek where she was active in the abolitionist movement and was an effective speaker and singer at meetings.

She continued to live and work in Battle Creek until her death in 1883.

In the photograph at right, she is portrayed in a painting with Abraham Lincoln, though it is doubtful that she ever actually met the president.

By the 1830s, there was regular stagecoach service between Detroit and Chicago. Soon local stagecoach routes were established throughout southern Michigan. The advertisement above, for the Hendryx line, shows routes from Marshall to Jonesville, Coldwater, and Lansing. Competition may have inspired the “Fare Reduced” phrase on the poster.

Fort Michilimackinac was occupied for 65 years during the 18th century. Today, it is one of our state’s most popular visitor attractions. Michiganians and tourists alike relish the history that is as deeply embedded in the old walls of the fort as the timbers are in the ground. Imagine one of your ancestors living there, barring the gates at sunset, or keeping watch from the tower during the night—imagine children playing, women visiting across the yard while hard at work, dogs barking, horses neighing—it all really happened at Fort Michilimackinac.

MICHIGAN'S RICH NATIVE AMERICAN CULTURE

When French explorers first visited Michigan in the early 17th century, there were approximately 100,000 Native Americans living in the Great Lakes region. Of these, the estimated population of what is now Michigan was approximately 15,000. Several tribes made the forests and river valleys their home. The main groups, sometimes referred to as “The Three Fires,” were the Chippewa (Ojibway), who lived mainly in the Upper Peninsula and the eastern part of the Lower Peninsula; the Ottawa, who resided along the western part of the Lower Peninsula; and the Potawatomi, who occupied part of southwestern Michigan after migrating from what is now eastern Wisconsin. Other significant tribes in this region included the Huron (Wyandot), who came to the southeastern area of Michigan from the Ontario side of Lake Erie; the Sauk, who resided in the Saginaw River Valley; the Miami, who lived along the St. Joseph River before migrating to western Ohio; and the Menominee, who lived in northern Wisconsin and parts of the Upper Peninsula.

Most Native American settlements in the Great Lakes region were along river valleys or near the Great Lakes shoreline and, much like today, most of the population was located in the southern half of the Lower Peninsula. Tribal settlements were not permanent, with groups moving to new locations every few years. Although agriculture was limited by soil conditions, dense forest, and a relatively short growing season, Native Americans did cultivate crops. Corn, beans, and squash were grown and wild apples, berries, nuts, game, fish, honey, and wild rice provided other sources of nourishment. Further, maple sugar was produced from the sap and birch trees were used for housing materials and canoes.

Native Americans of the pre-European era in Michigan left behind more than 1,000 burial mounds similar to those discovered in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri. Many mounds were uncovered in the Grand River and Muskegon River valleys of west-central Michigan.

The most puzzling prehistoric remnants, however, were carefully designed and arranged ridges of earth described as “garden beds.” These detailed geometric creations, long since destroyed by pioneers’ plows, consisted of ridges of soil about 18 inches high and covered many acres. Outside of a few found in Indiana and Wisconsin, the “garden beds” have been found only in Michigan. Their function remains a mystery.

Today, Michigan is home to 12 federally recognized Indian tribes. Like the State of Michigan, the 12 tribes are sovereign governments, recognized by the United States Constitution, Congressional public acts, and United States Supreme Court decisions. Like the State of Michigan, tribal governments exercise authority and jurisdiction over their lands and citizens. Michigan and tribal governments share responsibility to provide for and protect the health, safety, and welfare of their common constituents.

MICHIGAN FOOTSTEPS:

- 1618 Etienne Brulé passes through the North Channel at the neck of Lake Huron; within a short period of time, probably in 1622, he and a companion named Grenoble land at Sault Ste. Marie, probably the first white men to look upon the Sault. The Michigan Indian population is approximately 15,000.
- 1668 Father Jacques Marquette takes over the Sault mission and founds the first permanent settlement on Michigan soil at Sault Ste. Marie.
- 1671 The first of the military outposts, Fort de Buade (later known as Fort Michilimackinac) is established at St. Ignace.
- 1679 The Griffin, the first sailing vessel on the Great Lakes, is built by René Robert Cavelier de La Salle, and was lost in a storm on Lake Michigan.
- 1701 Detroit is founded as Fort Pontchartrain by French explorer and colonial administrator Antoine de la Mothe Cadillac as a permanent settlement to protect and secure the fur trade.
- In the fall, Madame Cadillac and Madame Tonty, wife of Italian explorer and trader Henry de Tonty, arrive at the fort as the first European women in the region.

Major Henry Gladwin took over the British command at the Fort du Detroit in 1762. The fort, built by Cadillac in 1701, was actually a tiny, walled city and its narrow streets were crowded with buildings. This map was published in 1764, but is based on surveys completed between 1749 and 1755.

PORTRAITS OF MICHIGAN

- 1715 Fort Michilimackinac is reestablished on the southern shore of the Straits of Mackinac.
- 1763 Ottawa Chief Pontiac and followers enter the fort at Detroit in an abortive effort to capture it from Major Gladwin by surprise attack. Detroit endures a siege of several weeks.
- 1781 Spanish forces from St. Louis take Fort St. Joseph (Niles); all residents are taken prisoner; the Spanish flag is raised. Raiders depart the next day and the fort reverts to British possession.
- 1783 The Treaty of Paris is signed, ending the Revolutionary War and including Michigan in the United States. The British control the Michigan area, however, for 13 more years.
- 1787 Congress passes the Northwest Ordinance of 1787, outlining government of the "Territory northwest of the Ohio River."

The Northwest Ordinance of 1787, one of the most important acts ever passed by any Congress, established the Northwest Territory. The delineation at right, which appeared in a 1795 edition of the United States Gazetteer, includes the future states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, a portion of Minnesota, and all of what would one day become the state of Michigan.

- 1792 Detroit, including settlers on both sides of the river, holds its first election, sending three representatives to the Parliament of Upper Canada.
- 1796 The British withdraw their garrison from Detroit. The Stars and Stripes are raised for the first time on Michigan soil by General "Mad" Anthony Wayne's advance guard.
- 1803 Ohio is admitted to the Union, including the strip of land that 30 years later will be known as the Toledo strip. Michigan becomes part of the Territory of Indiana.
- 1805 The Territory of Michigan is created, with Detroit as the capital.
- 1813 General William H. Harrison, departing for Washington, leaves Colonel (later General) Lewis Cass as the military governor at Detroit.

- 1817 The Catholepistemiad, or University of Michigania, is incorporated.
- 1818 Public land sales begin at Detroit; immigration from the East is under way.
- 1823 Congress advances the Territory of Michigan to the second governmental grade, authorizing the Legislative Council of nine members presidentially appointed and 18 locally elected. Enacted laws are subject to congressional approval. The first capitol is built in Detroit.
- 1824 On the motion of Father Richard, Congress appropriates $10,000 for a survey of the Great Sauk Trail (now U.S. 12) between Detroit and Chicago and makes an additional appropriation in 1825.
- 1825 The opening of the Erie Canal in New York facilitates settlement of Michigan and shipping of farm products to the East.
- 1830 Michigan issues a railway charter to the Detroit & Pontiac Railway, the first incorporated railway in the limits of the old Northwest Territory.
- 1831 Stevens T. Mason, age 19, becomes the acting governor of the Michigan Territory.
- 1835 The Ohio Legislature passes an act asserting claims to the "Toledo Strip," along its northern boundary.
Governor Mason calls out the militia as the "Toledo War" begins with more anger than gunfire. Border incidents continue into September, and jurisdictional wrangling goes on through all of 1836.
A convention at Detroit drafts a state constitution in preparation for statehood. Stevens T. Mason, who was removed from office by President Jackson because of Mason's action on the Toledo question, is elected as the first governor of the state of Michigan at 23 years of age.

During the 19th century, agriculture was the mainstay of Michigan's economy. This father and son, unsmiling but filled with pride, stand in their field, tools at the ready. They were representative of all Michigan residents who earned their living from the soil.

MICHIGAN COUNTIES— How They Got Their Names!

ALCONA

Believed to be an origination of Henry R. Schoolcraft, who served as mediator between the United States and the Native Americans, and who also was a member of the Territorial Council of Michigan. “Al” is Arabic for “the,” “co” means “plain” or “prairie,” and “na” means “excellence.” Therefore—“a fine or excellent plain.”
